ED. THE INDEPENDENT:

In your notice of this attack in last evening's issue you omitted to observe that when you blow the froth from the top of the Advertiser's article on the 17th, and remove the sediment of personalities from the bottom, the gist that remains is in perfect agreement with the Diocesan Magazine in maintaining "the importance of a recognition of hygienic laws going hand in hand with religious duties." The sentence to this effect exactly summarizes the position taken by the Diocesan Magazine, which has devoted several columns of the current number to the setting forth of the first principles of hygiene, the neglect of which has brought Honolulu to its present plight. The method adopted by some critics is to write their criticism first, and read the article criticised afterwards or not at all. This is clearly the position of the editor of the P. C. A.; and so, like Balaam of old, whilst intending to curse, he blesses the Diocesan Magazine, and adopts its tone in insisting that the recognition of hygienic laws must go hand in hand with religious duties. It is refreshing to be thus able to hail the Advertiser as an ally against the imperious order of the Government that they must not go hand in hand. The highest and central duties of religion cannot be performed in private. If they could why do we build churches at all? The Government says, Attend to hygiene and step your religious duties. The Diocesan Magazine, supported by the Advertiser, maintains that they must go hand in hand.
